The Panther

From endless passing of the bars
his gaze has wearied—there is no more it can hold.
There seem to be a thousand bars
always, and past those thousand bars there is no world.
The soft pad of his brawny, rippling
paw turns itself in a tightening circle till, like a mighty dance around a tiny space, it centers a numb but still enormous will.
But at times the shades of his pupils rise, grasping an image he cannot resist; through his tense, unmoving limbs it flies, and within his heart it ceases to exist.

Rainer Maria Rilke (1875–1926) is one of the world's most beloved poets. Joseph Cadora is a guitarist, writer, and translator. He lives in Berkeley, California.
