Synopsis

He was only there for a business deal...A couple of days...that was all it was supposed to take for property developer Roman Blackwell to decide if the strip of land just south of Dare, Montana would be the perfect spot for his next luxury resort. He wasn't interested in repairing his frayed relationship with his half-brother who'd moved to the small town a few months earlier and he definitely wasn't interested in doing anything more than scratching an itch when he checked out the gay club near his hotel. But when his plans for a quick hook-up are waylaid after he steps in to save a young man being brutalized, Roman finds himself building an emotional connection he never saw coming. One bad decision changed everything...College student Hunter Greene has spent 18 months trying to forget the one night he gave in to temptation and made a decision to hide one lie by telling another. But the guilt of knowing he shattered another young man's life to protect his own secret shame is slowly destroying him and he knows that soon even his spiral into a dangerous pattern of self-destructive behavior won't be enough to keep his entire world from imploding. But the last thing he's looking for is someone to save him. But fate works in mysterious ways...Forced to return to the town he grew up in, the last person Hunter expects to run into is the mysterious savior who changed everything with one soul shattering kiss. While he can't deny his attraction to Roman, Hunter knows that he'll never be free to act on it and once Roman discovers the terrible secret he's hiding, it won't matter anyway. Because some things just can't be forgiven...**Full length novel (70k words)Trigger Warning: This book does contain multiple possible triggers for some readers. ## Customer Reviews

The fourth book in the Finding series can be read as a standalone, technically, but IMHO, they're best read in order, as 1) previous characters (very validly) appear in each successive tale, and bonus, we get to see them living their HEAs, 2) there's an important connection between Hunter and the leads from book 1, and between Roman and the leads from book 3, and 3) because Sloane Kennedy just keeps getting better and better with each new book. How she writes so quickly, how she does it and manages to bring something new and fresh to each book, whilst still linking them believably, is impressive. Soon-to-be 20yo Hunter turns out to be the 'baddie' from book 1, though he only appeared in name in that, but here, he's a broken character wracked with guilt and believes that he deserves to be punished for what he unthinkingly and unintentionally did. Yes, he was naive and scared, and yes, there were some very nasty consequences, but he didn't act maliciously, and there were understandable reasons for what he did. His pain and suffering, both mental and physical, were upsetting and painful to read about, which is not at all a criticism of the book, simply a warning that it doesn't pull its punches and that you'll read, feel and almost see what SK describes. The book starts with a shocker of a scene, that even as a beta reader of hers, I couldn't have envisaged, but which showed how low and in the depths of despair Hunter was, and how little love he had for himself. It saddened and shocked me, but it also brought Roman into his life. Roman, in book 3, came across as cold, closed off, unfeeling and unbending, but his icy demeanour didn't last more than 3/4 pages into this book, and he ended up being Hunter's saviour - and his salvation.
