Customer Reviews

The book is factually inaccurate from the get-go. The Author writes that estrogen rises early in the cycle to thicken the uterine lining. That's wrong...while estrogen does affect the lining, the hormone that causes the lining to thicken is progesterone. Then the author writes that progesterone triggers the release of the egg to cause ovulation. That's wrong, the hormone that does this is luteizing hormone. These factual inaccuracies are stated as some of the premises underlying support of the author's lifestyle recommendations. And the factual inaccuracies about these things of such central importance to don't bode well for the soundness of the recommendations that she makes. In and of themselves errors about basic facts of biology that are so readily available on the Internet do not inspire confidence. There are many other books out there about this important topic.
